Purpose of the Joseph B. Holloway Memorial Scholarship Fund

The Joseph B. Holloway Memorial Scholarship Fund helps Upper Ohio Valley children to attend Oglebay Institute's School of Dance. Scholarships may also be used to support School of Dance outreach programs that serve low-income and/or underserved audiences.

About Joseph B. Holloway

A native of Wheeling, W.Va., Joseph Holloway was the brother of W. Peter Holloway, Jr. and Dr. John Holloway. He was a modern dancer, choreographer, and revered teacher. As a dancer, he worked in modern dance companies and opera companies around the world. He taught dance at The Nat Horne Studio in Manhattan and Mount Holyoke College in Massachusetts, among others.

Holloway later went on to become a highly successful director and producer of theatre, producing musical theater both on and off-Broadway. He was a founding member of New Directions Theatre, a company dedicated to fostering, promoting, and advancing the art of theatrical directors.

As a dancer, Holloway was known for being a precise technician with a laser-like energy and focus. His choreography was highly theatrical and often included intricate storytelling and magic.

Joseph Holloway was part of a lost generation of American Modern Dance and theatrical choreographers whose work was cut short by the AIDS epidemic.

To mark the twentieth anniversary of Joe's passing, his brothers and his partner, Mark Nadler, established the Joseph B. Holloway Memorial Scholarship Fund in 2019.
